strongest language. That question "can never be the object of negotiations or concessions" "so long as a German hand can hold a gun." The German Foreign Secretary does not say this because he believes it; it is recalled that M. Favre used almost identical language to Bismarck a few months before France had to surrender Alsace-Lorraine. He is silent about Beligium, he is apt with an answer about Alsace-Lorraine, not because his attitude in either case assists the cause of peace, but because in both it suits his own political purposes—in the first case, internal political purposes. Baron von Kühlmann has a considerable reputation as an astute diplomat; but the object of his statement by given in large quantities to kill the nainer to germ and other ansesthetics rum about Alsace-Lorraine is abundantly diplomat; but the object of his statement about Alsace-Lorraine is abundantly clear. "It would be difficult," in Mr. Asquith's words, "to find a clumsier or more transparent manageure than this maladroit attempt to sow discord between Army in the field still has its rum ration, for ever.

maladroit attempt to sow discord between ourselves and our French Allies."

Its immediate result, of course, has been to produce from Mr. Lloyd George, as the head of the British Government, the most emphatic re-endorsement of France's historic claim. That, however, is not the main point. The main point is that, whether the German Government speaks or is silent, neither its silence nor its speech can be taken at their face value. While it is talking about peace, what it is thinking about is the dividing of the Allies. Baron von Kühlmann's statement belies his reputation as an astute diplomatist, for it is a transparent exhibition of polihis reputation as an astute diplomatist, for it is a transparent exhibition of political dishonesty. There is no real need of further proof of the dishonesty which, even more than its brutality, is the prime vice of Prussian militarism; but the exhibition of it at this moment, when the German Government is anxious to impress the Allies with its complete sincerity, is singularly inept. That is the Government with which the Allies have to deal, and, unless and until the German people repudiate it, they can only deal with its complete sincerity, is singularly inept. That is the Government with the Gove and until the German people repudiate it, they can only deal with it with the one argument which it understands-the argument of force. If that argument is to re-solve itself into a contest of endurance, the Allies, as Mr. Asquith says, have no reason to lose heart. The crisis in Germany encourages their faith that in such the Ulster Unionist Council and the Ulster a contest they can support the strain very Unionist delegates to the Convention, when a much better than the enemy. Germany, beaten in the field, has come to rely for wearing them down solely upon the submarine. It is a vain hope. Mr. Asquith

This point of view is similar to one held by many members of the Diplomatic Corps in London and in Paris. These Convention met yesterday in the Studenta' Memorial Hall, Trinity College, Dublin, and had under consideration various matters repeople are intensely interested in the prepeople are intensely interested in the present situation of Germany, recognising that never before has that country been so hardly pressed from a political point of view; and no event, however great, in the German political world would surprise them. The fall of the German Chancellor is expected before very long, and his fall will place the Kaiser in great difficulty. A successor will probably be in a position to make his own terms, and the Kaiser and Hindenburg will be so placed that they must swallow them. In all, the events of the past week are looked upon as materially Writing in connection with the " Our Day" appeal for the British Red Cross Society, Sir Douglas Haig expresses gratitude to the British Red Cross Society and Order of St. John of Jerusalem for their admirable work with the British Expedilionary Force in France and Belgium. Whether in transporting wounded or in supplying a host of comforts to our men while in hospital, their work has been performed with zeal, devotion, and efficiency. The aid which they have rendered to the Royal Army Medical Corps in France has, indeed, been beyond all all praise. U BOAT MENACE RAPIDLY DIMINISHING.

The Prime Minister, accompanied by the President of the Board of Agriculture, and Sin Arthur Lee, K.C.B., Director of Food Production, received at 10 Downing street on Tuesday a deputation from the Advisory Committee of the Board of Agriculture, the Parliamentary Committee on Agriculture, the Central Chumber of Agriculture, the Farmers' Club, the National Farmers' Union, the Federation of War Agricultural Committees, and the R.A.S.R. Agricultural Committees, and the R.A.S.E. Emergency Committee.

Agricultural Committees, and the R.A.S.E.

Emergency Committee.

The Prime Minister, in reply to Sir Bevills Stanier and Sir Mark Collet, who spoke on behalf of the deputation, said:—I am very much obliged to you for giving me an opportunity once more of meeting you, because I want to make an appeal to you as the representatives of this great industry to assist the Government at a very critical stage in the prosecution of this terrible war. It is no exaggeration to say that you are fighting on one of the most important fronts in that war, and if that front is broken by the enemy the whole of our defence
collapses, because unless we are able to supply the population behind the lines, as well as the soldiers who are fighting so gallantly in the lines, then our prospects of winning the war are remote. That is why I want to make a very special appeal through you to the farming community in England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales, to make the most special efforts a the course of the coming few weeks to increase enormough the supply of food in this country.

NOT AFRAID OF THE SUBMARINE.

NOT AFRAID OF THE SUBMARINE.

Let me say at once that I am not doing this because of any apprehension or anxiety I feel on the ground of submarines. Earlier in the year I felt very considerable anxiety on the subject. We were dealing with an enemy who was dangerous in proportion to his invisibility, because whenever we can meet the German, I have never seen the Britisher yet who need be afraid of him. But when he is out of sight, whether in pill-boxes or under the waves, he can be a very, very great nuisance. Therefize, I did not know to what extent we were able to deal effectively with this very insidious and obscure enemy, because the sea is a gigantic place, and I was rather afraid that we might not be able to track and to trace him.

However, very largely owing to the skill, NOT AFRAID OF THE SUBMARINE.

place, and I was rather arrain that we might not be able to track and to trace him.

However, very largely owing to the skill, the thought, and the courage which have been put into our operations, I am in a position to state definitely that the submarine menace is a rapidly diminishing ane: In fact, if you take our net losses for the last month, they are less than at any previous period of the last twelve menths.

In that period you will observe I am including not merely the time of the unlimited submarine warfare, which increased our losses very considerably, but the three or four months before that when the Gormans had not undertaken this new method of attacking our commerce. Our net losses have been less than they have been at any time since September, 1916. Therefore, I am not apprehensive that they will be able to starve these islands through the action of their submarines. That is not what is causing anxiety at the present mement.

IRISH MINERAL RESEARCH.

A deputation from the Irish Trades and Industries Council, consisting of Mr. John O'Neill (Chairman of Lucania Engineering Works); Mr. E. A. Johnson, and Mr. H. A. McNeill, waited on Sir Thomas Russell, Vice-President of the Department of Agriculture, yesterday, at the offices of the Department. The proceedings were private, and no communication was afterwards made to the Press. The deputation urged that a properly equipped Bureau of Mineral Research should be at once established in Ireland, and that such a bureau should form part of a strong institution for the development of Irish industries. That it should under no circumstances have a meroly nominal existence, such as might result from the apportionment of its duties among officials already over-tasked, and the burden of its requirements among departments already over-burdened. That, in fact, it should be an active, living institution, in which the calm consideration of the geologist should be followed by the imagination, the enthusiasm, and the energy of the prospector, and the latter's discoveries by the scientific appreciation and control of the mining engineer.

MR. DE VALERA AND PHYSICAL FORCE.

Mr. de Valera held a meeting at Killaloe on Wednesday night. He was excerted into the town by the local corps of the Irish Volunteers Mr. J. Hayes, Secretary of the local branch of the A.O.H., presided.

Mr. de Valera, referring to the recent election, said that they had won one part of the fight, but it was only the first part, and there was a tremendous lot of work to be done atill. They should organise themselves politically, so that the will of the nation would be able to express itself politically. When the representatives they elected were in sufficiently large numbers they would meet in Dublin to take on the meral authority of the country. Those whe did not believe in physical force might talk as they pleased, but any sane man should admit that in the long run the success of all moral authority was the physical force to back it. Words have little weight. England was still casting covetous eyes on the young men of Ireland, and they could never be too certain that they would not put conscription into operation in Ireland. It had been defeated up to this, not by the words of Mr. Dillon or auch men, but because the Government realised that if they would resist. As long as they were determined that they would never be conscripted.

Mr. de Valera, referring to the recent election, and the streets about six o'clock. A man who was believed to be a called the said that he streets by the policie, and it is asid that he street by the policie, and it is asid that he street by the policie, and the erry of "Sinn Fein" was taken up by hundreds of men. Seenes of a tragretiable kind followed.
